PREFACE

This vocabulary of the Bontok Igorot dialect is an expansion of one of which about thirty mimeographed copies were issued and circulated by the author of the present work in July, 1904. The former vocabulary, giving the Igorot equivalents of about 1,800 English words, was compiled between June 12, 1903, when I took up my permanent residence in Bontok, and the date on which it was issued. Previously, between December, 1902, and June, 1903, Dr. A. E. Jenks, afterwards the head of the Ethnological Survey of the Philippine Islands, had gathered a list of Igorot words, numbering about 666, exclusive of numerals, classified according to subjects, and printed in his interesting volume, "The Bontok Igorot," issued under the authority of the Insular Government, and appearing in the autumn of 1904. Of these words about five-sixths are found to be included in this present vocabulary, although not always with the same meanings attached. I learn also that Dr. Seidenadel, instructor in the University of Chicago, has used to such good advantage the knowledge gained by intercourse with various Igorots who have been taken to the United States for exhibition purposes, that he has a volume ready for press, embracing a grammar, various translations, and a vocabulary.

The foregoing are the first serious attempts to record and describe the Igorot language. So far as there is any record, it seems to be a fact that no white man has hitherto arrived at an intimate knowledge of the Bontok dialect, although of course many may have learned a smattering of words. One can only wonder at this tardiness in approaching the task of doing for these people what would tend to dignify their language and foster their self-respect, and what has already been done for many of the other Malayan tribes of the Islands.

While, for an unwritten language, the Bontok dialect is an astonishingly good and regular one, we are met on the threshold of the task of describing it by two special difficulties, namely, first, that, as in the case of many Malayan tongues, the vowels are so obscure and variable as to be particularly elusive to the Western ear. I believe that some of the Malayan dialects have presented this difficulty so formidably as to discourage altogether the attempt to represent some of the vowel sounds. Certainly in my work of writing Bontok Igorot I have been in constant doubt. Two persons, listening to the same speaker, could hardly agree as to the best representation of a given sound; and different speakers exhibit undoubted varieties of pronunciation. Of special failures and inconsistencies arising from this I shall speak more particularly under the head of "Introductory Notes." A second difficulty has been the lack of native helpers having any degree of grammatical knowledge. Furthermore they had but slight knowledge of English and it was almost impossible to get from them, at any one time, a deliberate statement of the idiomatic equivalents. Their tendency to the mere transference of words has been constant. The only remedy for this has come through my daily intimate contact of nearly five years with the people; but it would be remarkable if, in a work compiled under such circumstances, there were not many deficiencies, and the compiler does not hope that his work is free from them.

I desire to record here my great obligation to the following natives of the Bontok region who have assisted me by furnishing materials for this volume: Antero Cabrera, Nicasio Balinag, Hilary Pitapit (Clapp), Narciso Cariño, James Amok, Anacleto Galo, Tainan, and Pablo Lunar. In every stage of the work of digesting and arranging these materials I have had the benefit of the help and encouragement and parallel labors of my colleagues in Bontok, Mr. J. H. T. Mackenzie, Miss M. P. Waterman, Miss E. B. Oakes, and Miss L. Whitcombe. The irksome task of dealing with and transcribing my first very imperfect manuscript was kindly taken in hand, during my furlough in America, by Mr. Jesse Knight, and afterwards by the Rev. Henry Swift, chaplain of the Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army, whose previous studies and work among the Sioux Indians gave him a special interest in primitive peoples and their languages. To all of these I would express my sincere thanks and the hope that this book may be of some service in helping a people who are well worth our best efforts.

WALTER CLAYTON CLAPP.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES

I

The vocabulary consists of two parts, Igorot-English and English-Igorot.

In the Igorot section an attempt is made to indicate the grammatical relationships of words, in cases where they would not be evident to a student of the language. The included number of sentences or expressions involving several words as the equivalent of one English word is not great, not because they do not exist but because the work is not a phrase book, but is intended simply as a guide to the words most frequently used in the Bontok region, from which, by experience of the idiom, the learner may gradually build the more indirect expressions.

The English section of the vocabulary is intended chiefly as a rough index to the Igorot part, with only general distinctions noted parenthetically.

In almost every instance it will be found that the two sections of the vocabulary correspond. The exceptions are some evident cases of reduplicated forms and of substantive forms incorporated in verbs in such manner as to be unmistakable.

II. PRONUNCIATION

The following notes are given with no thought that, simply by their aid, with the vocabulary one could learn to pronounce the Bontok Igorot dialect. Rules and systems of phonetic representation have been generally discredited as efficient means for the practical acquiring of European languages, and much more must we rely upon the training of ear and vocal organs by actual practice if we wish to be understood by these primitive Orientals. There are accents and inflections and ever-recurring sounds which elude written representation.

But, in general, as a system of graphic representation, the following has been adopted:

VOWELS, USING AS A BASIS THE "CONTINENTAL" SOUNDS

a prevailingly broad in quality, like a in father, but usually pronounced very quickly, so that the effect on an untrained listener is often that of our u in hut. When occurring alone, or at the end of a syllable, sometimes at the beginning of a word, and specially when it has the written acute accent, it is pronounced with distinct breadth.

e when long, as at the end of a syllable, or alone, is like English a in mate; otherwise it is short, like e in met.

i varying from long, like ee in feet, when isolated in a syllable, or at the end of one, to the sound of i in his.

o when long, is like o in go in situations similar to those noted concerning the preceding vowels; but usually otherwise, and might be best described as long in quality, short in quantity. In some instances and by some hearers the sound which we have represented by o would be more correctly written u, as being to such persons as clear as the oo sound in look.

u varying from the long sound, as oo in food to the short sound of the English u, as in put, according to situation in the syllable; the shorter sound debatable with the shorter sound of o, as noted under that letter.

ö normally like the German ö in schön (though seldom, if ever, prolonged as that sometimes is, and never given an a sound); but verging at times toward a short i sound, on the one side, and toward the short e sound on the other.

DIPHTHONGS AND COMBINATIONS OF VOWELS

ai like ay in Spanish.

au like ow in cow.

eu a gliding from short e to u sound.

oi a quick gliding from o to i.

öi a quick gliding from ö to i.

When the letters comprising these combinations are not to be taken in such connection, but constitute parts of different syllables, they are separated by hyphens in the initial forms in the Igorot-English part of this vocabulary.

CONSONANTS

b as in English, but generally replaced by f.

ch as in child.

d as in English, but usually replaced by ch.

f, l, m, n, p, t, v, all as in English.

g always hard, generally replaced by k.

k as in English usually; but the Bontok people distinguish another k sound, guttural in character and peculiar, which is not represented in this vocabulary.

s as the sibilant or soft s in English.

w and y always treated as consonants, with English sound.

It will be observed that c is discarded as being sufficiently expressed by s and k; k and j find only occasional use in words adapted from other languages; q is not used, although it might possibly be utilized to express the guttural k sound, to which allusion has been made. There seem to be a few instances of a real, though labored, pronunciation of r, but l ordinarily takes its place. x and z are not used.

III. VERBS

Throughout the first part of this vocabulary there has been employed a system of abbreviation in the case of verbs. The division has no philological signification. Hyphens are often used to separate the initial form into divisions. They do not indicate the pronunciation. They are used simply to enable us to substitute in the subsequent forms a character which shall stand for one of these divisions. This character is “—”

After each initial verb-form (in the case of regular verbs) there is, first, a numeral indicating the conjugation, then “v.tr.” or “int.” to indicate whether the verb is transitive or intransitive.

The parts of the verb are given in a definite order:

- (1) Present indicative, first person singular.
- (2) Past indicative, first person singular.
- (3) The infinitive form which follows Laichik, “I desire.”
- (4) The infinitive form which follows Kawis ai or Ngag ai, “It is good” or “It is bad.”
- (5) The perfect passive participle.

(6) There is sometimes added what might be called a reflexive or subjective form, of imperative force, in the second person singular. It is characterized by the prefix umi, or by the first consonant of the verb, followed by um. The signification of the form is: “You do (whatever the verb expresses) to me or for me,” e. g.—

Present indicative Pakuwek, “I strike,” as with a stick; subjective imperfect Pumakuka, “you strike me.”

Present indicative Palaiakak, “I toss up,” e. g., a coin; subjective imperfect Umipalalagka, “you toss up for me.”

(7) Also, occasionally, in this vocabulary, will be found a form beginning with mangi—, man—, or men—; past tense, nangi—, nan—, nen—, which is used in sentences introduced by such interrogative words as sino (who?); used also to express the simple action of the verb, with suffixes and prefixes accordingly. This form exists in many more instances than are given in this vocabulary.

It should be said that great ambiguity has been noted in the use of the various infinitive forms, some native helpers giving, and apparently using one, some another. The truth seems to be that there is great latitude allowed in usage.

CONJUGATIONS

While the display of the complete inflection of the verb may be relegated to works on grammar, it must be explained that in this book the verbs have been classified according to their characteristic inflection in the present indicative active into six conjugations, as follows:

First conjugation. Verbs in —ak, —ka, etc., mostly intransitive.

Second conjugation. Verbs in -ak, -am, etc., mostly transitive.

Third conjugation. Verbs in -ek, -em, etc., transitive.

Fourth conjugation. Verbs in -ko, -mo, etc., transitive. It is interesting to note that many verbs of this conjugation take, as direct object, the instrument of the action which the verbal root expresses.

Fifth conjugation. Verbs in -ik, -im, etc., transitive; closely allied to the third conjugation.

Sixth conjugation. Verbs in -ok, -om, etc., transitive.

Under the first conjugation will be found a large number of verbs whose initial syllables are either en, in, or ün, these differences resulting from the various sounds conveyed to the ear by the utterance of the native speaker. To disregard these differences would be to be untrue to the apparent facts of the language, but the result is to separate the words alphabetically. This and other difficulties might be avoided by the more scientific method of gathering the various forms and inflections around the alphabetically arranged and essential verbal roots.

It needs to be added regarding verbs that the list of them seems capable of indefinite extension. Any substantive, whether Igorot, or Spanish, or English, is readily and soberly transformed, e.g., into a transitive verb in -ek, or an intransitive one in -ak, by being given the proper prefixes and suffixes.

IV. SYLLABICATION AND REDUPLICATION

In general, it is true that, in the system of spelling adopted in this vocabulary, a separate syllable should be assigned to each vowel. The exceptions to this occur in the case of the vowel sequences, which may form diphthongs or combinations, and this they may be assumed to do, unless (in the initial form in the Igorot-English part) their assignment to different syllables is indicated by the hyphen.

Reduplications are very frequent in the Bontok Igorot dialect, as in all Malayan dialects. The number and variety of them seem endless, and only very gradually, and rather by instinct than by study, is the learner able to know and use them. This vocabulary does not profess to give consistently these forms, although some of them are recorded. The following may serve as examples of the principle of reduplication, expressing plurality, comparison, intensity:

Fafa-i. "woman;" fabfafa-i, "women;" kafafavfafa-i, "very many women."

Kawis, "good;" kagawis, "better."

Ilaek. "I see;" itilaek, "I carefully regard, watch expectantly."

V. ABBREVIATIONS USED

adj.	Adjective.
adv.	Adverb.
E.g.	For example.
(?)	This indicates doubt as to the rendering.
gen.	General or generic.
i.e.	Id est , "that is."
Ilok.	Ilokano.
intj.	Interjection.
Kokoa	(—ak, —am, —ana, etc.) These abbreviations are of Ilokano particles, which correspond to the Ilokano —co, —mo, —na, etc., meaning, "my," "thy," "his," etc.
M.	Mission word, a word introduced by the missionaries.
n.	Noun.
n.adj.	Word that serves both as a noun and an adjective.
plu.	Plural.
Sp.	Spanish.
v.	When standing before an Igorot word, as "v. enchangto " it means vide , "see," "refer to."
v.def.	Defective verb.
v.pl.irr.	Irregular verb, plural.
v.tr. and int.	Verb both transitive and intransitive.
1, reflexive.	A reflexive verb of the first conjugation.
2, sing.	Verb of the second conjugation found or used only in the singular number.
2, def.v.	Defective verb of the second conjugation.
5, def.aux.	A defective auxiliary verb of the fifth conjugation.
3, a.	An impersonal verb used only in the third person singular.
1, v.tr.	Transitive verb of the first conjugation.
2, v.tr.	Second transitive.
3, v.tr.	Third transitive.
4, v.tr.	Fourth transitive.
5, v.tr.	Fifth transitive.
6, v.tr.	Sixth transitive.
1, int.	Intransitive verb of the first conjugation.
2, int.	Second intransitive.

Whenever a Roman numeral followed by an Arabic is used, the reference is to a translation of the Gospel of St. Mark into Igorot, which is now being issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Words marked [Ilok.] are not necessarily of Ilokano origin, for it may well be that the Igorot language has an equal, or even prior right to them. The abbreviation merely indicates a coincidence or a resemblance which suggests a relationship. Some of those marked [Sp.] may seem at first far removed from the Castilian speech, but a consideration of the consonantal substitutions customary among these people, with a knowledge of their characteristic abbreviations, makes clear, although amusing, some wonderful transformations.
